Signs and symptoms Bleeding Thrombocytopenia Causes Mutations of the WFS gene (WFS1) WFS1 mutations include splice site mutations resulting in decreased production of WFS1 protein. This leads to reduced or absent WFS1 protein production and hence results in the characteristic clinical findings. Other WFS1 mutations Other WFS1 mutations occur in the gene's exons and produce other changes, which result in a weakened or non-functional WFS1 protein. Pathophysiology The mutation in WFS1 protein affects the interaction of the protein with protein partners, as well as the catalytic activity of the protein. This results in impaired glycoprotein-mediated signaling and processing. The reduced glycoprotein processing leads to an impaired platelet adhesion and prothrombinase complex formation. This causes increased activation of the coagulation system. Diagnosis Differential diagnosis Differential diagnosis includes Bernard-Soulier syndrome, Glanzmann's thrombasthenia, and thrombopathia.
