all parties who have been completely robbed of their rights. The Orange Order has never been a free expression of the Irish people, it has existed for almost one hundred years and only represents one of the views of the Irish people. The right of the people is to express their opinion and their right to protest. It does not mean they have to be a part of any organisation that you see fit to create that protest in.

It does not mean they have to take part in your marches, and it certainly does not mean that if they do take part in your marches that they have to wear the attire of your choosing. You are not entitled to the right of the Irish people to express their wishes. Where the Irish people are concerned they have a right to stand up for their rights. You are not doing so by expressing your opinions. You are not doing so by validating your views with violence, you are not doing so by intimidating people who happen to be doing something else. These days it is more than obvious that the world is a smaller place now than it was in the late 19th century. You are not going to tell young girls that their lives are not important and that if they fail to belong to an organisation they will be shut out from the world, you will not go the lengths you have been going. This is not being brave, you are not being manly, you are simply saying that you are upholding the law, that you are a member of the law. The other point I would like to make is that the last person in a crowd is going to make a statement. The last person in a group of fifty or a hundred is not going to shout the loudest or make a lasting impression on history. What you say in a crowd is not going to be heard by others. What you do in a crowd is going to determine what will become of your organisation. You are the leader of that crowd, the people follow you. That is why the crowd's foot-soldiers are so important. They are the tools with which you will make a lasting impression on history. They can start small, they can be a talking point, but they can also be used to make a lasting impression if you use them properly. These days the press are always looking for people to condemn. The press always has their hands
